WAS A DEMOCRATIC ROUT.

Atkinson's Majority in Georgia Will Not Be Over 10,000.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 5.—There will be sixty-five Populist members in the Georgia legislature, which meets in this city next November. It is not yet ascertained how many such senators there will be. Returns coming in today, officially verified, cut down Atkinson's majority, and it looks now as if he would not have over 10,000 in the state. This is the first time since 1870 that the Democratic majority has fallen below 40,000. It has ranged from 60,000 to 70,000.

The most startling feature of the election, however, is the development of the fact that several congressional districts show clean Populist majorities, which may smash the solid Democratic delegation in November next. In the First, Second, Eleventh and Eighth districts, where the Populists were hardly organized and where they did not run legislative tickets in half the counties, the Democratic majorities of two years ago were reduced 50 per cent. In Henry G. Turner's district, the Eleventh, where hardly a Populist county ticket appeared, the Democratic majority fell over 60 per cent. The Tenth, Tom Watson's old district, gave a clear Populist majority. The Fourth, now represented by Charles J. Moses, is Populist also, and returns coming in from the Seventh indicate that district will be likewise. Carter Tate's district, the Ninth, only missed being Populist by seven votes.

There is a strong impression that the disastrous result to the Democracy is due to Secretary Hoke Smith and Congressman Henry G. Turner. Two years ago, in the presidential campaign, Hoke Smith refused to participate in the discussions under the direction of Chairman Atkinson of the executive committee. Now that Atkinson was running for the governorship Smith threw himself into the campaign, making a fight against silver coinage under all circumstances except the agreement of foreign nations. This was controverting the position previously taken by the state platform and the nominee for governor.

Henry G. Turner, in advocacy of the same idea, went into every district, but almost wholly avoiding his own, and declared for Cleveland's views.

The Populists were quick to catch on to this wrangle in the Democratic ranks and tantalized free silver Democrats with the position of the administration as developed by the two representatives stumping the state. It was in this condition of unrest that the Democratic state committee refused the request of the Populists for representation on the cards of election managers. Unfortunately for the Democrats, the close vote which is being reported affords the Populists the opportunity of declaring that the result will be tampered with in many counties. While there is hardly any legitimate room for such a charge, yet it will be made so constantly as to grow into a belief.

The Republicans voted solidly with the Populists all through the state, though there was a considerable division of the colored vote, owing to the presence of campaign money on both sides. The Populists are hurrying up the naming of congressional candidates in the doubtful districts. They will try to elect Garry J. Thornton in the Fourth, W. H. Felton in the Seventh, Newton J. Turley in the Ninth and Thomas E. Watson in the Tenth.
